"There are many skills you can learn studying philosophy. Critical thinking, written communication, etc. But, let's be honest, people don't normally study philosophy for the improvement of their skills. It's because we are drawn to it, in spite of the fact that the future path is unclear. It's added to my story, something that makes me a little different than most others in the room. Not better but different, which I believe has contributed to finding my way, personally and professionally."
